

i am

EMORY

i am

father, husband, teacher, clinician, researcher, leader.

I am an Emory faculty member, and I am transgender. I want to teach my two daughters to live with strength, authenticity, and respect. Emory's values and policies protect me and my family, and they make Emory a stronger community.—Bekh Bradley-Davino

emory.edu/iam

EMORY

i

AM

daughter, sister, friend,
physical therapist, artist, lesbian.

I have studied and worked at Emory's Center for Rehabilitation Medicine for two decades. I am grateful for this family away from home, which has accepted all parts of my identity and created a safe place for me to be fully present.—Sarah Blanton

emory.edu/iam

EMORY

i AM

African American, daughter, sister, from a deeply religious family
and a small Southern town.

Faith and responsibility are important to me. I am glad to work at Emory, a community that respects my identity as a lesbian, my relationship with my spouse, and my values.—Marsha Howard

emory.edu/iam

EMORY

i AM

son and brother, gay man,
Southern Jew, Emory physician.

There is no automatic protection for being gay in the workplace in the United States. I am grateful to work at Emory, which values an inclusive, welcoming environment for all of its employees.—Jason Schneider

emory.edu/iam

EMORY

i am

south asian, immigrant, lesbian,
raising two children with my life partner.

As an Emory employee, I am part of a diverse community. When we need medical care, my family and I come to Emory Healthcare, where we know we'll be treated with dignity and respect.

—Priyanka Sinha

emory.edu/iam

EMORY